How to Protect Yourself from New Fraud Scams

In the wake of recent bank failures, many vendors are updating their banking information. Scammers are taking advantage of this moment of change to target unsuspecting customers. By preying on common anxieties, fraudsters can trick you into sending money to a phony bank account or providing your personal banking information.

Here are some tips to help you stay safe:

- Don't click on anything in an unsolicited email or text message asking you to update or verify account information. Scam emails and text messages often look like they're from legitimate companies, but they're actually designed to trick you into clicking on a link or providing your personal information. If you're not sure if an email or text message is legitimate, don't click on any links or open any attachments. Instead, contact the company directly to verify the message.
- If you receive a request from a merchant to change your payment information, don't do it until you've confirmed that the request is legitimate. You can do this by contacting the merchant directly or by checking their website for a recent announcement about a change in banking information.
- Don't rely on caller ID to confirm someone's identity. Scammers can easily spoof caller ID to make it look like they're calling from a legitimate company. If you receive a call from someone claiming to be from your bank or credit card company, hang up and call the company back using the number on the back of your card.

- Look up the company's phone number through a legitimate source before calling them. If you receive a call from someone claiming to be from a company, don't use the number they provide. Instead, look up the company's phone number on their website or through a legitimate directory.
- Take your time. A legitimate representative from your bank or credit card company will never pressure you to make a decision immediately. If you're feeling rushed or pressured, hang up the phone and call back later.
- When in doubt, hang up the phone and call your bank or credit card company directly. If you're ever unsure about a phone call or email, hang up the phone and call your bank or credit card company directly. They'll be able to verify the request and help you protect your account.

By following these tips, you can help protect yourself from new fraud scams.
